

Most men are still performing for a father who stopped watching years ago.

The father wound isn't about what he did.

It's about what he couldn't give.

Sandro Dalla Torre

The gap between the father
you needed and the one you got.

If he was shut down, you learned early that feelings don't matter, and being useful is the price of belonging.

That's not just a belief.
It wired itself into your nervous system before you were seven.

At 40 it runs as a loop:
achieve, seek approval, collapse when it doesn't come, or burn every authority down.

Same wound.

Healing starts the day you become the father to yourself that he couldn't be.

The man who does that stops performing for ghosts.

He starts leading from his own authority.
