

The thing running your life is the thing you refuse to look at.

The shadow doesn't persist
because it's powerful.

It persists because you feed
it energy every time you push
it down.

The anger you won't feel runs
your decisions.

The desire you won't own leaks into your relationships.

The grief you won't touch
becomes the flatness you can't explain.

You can't manage what
refuses to be managed.
You can only stop the war.

Integration isn't fixing the dark parts.

It's giving them a seat at the table, instead of pretending the table is clean.
