

Your shadow doesn't only live
in your mind.
It lives in your body.

Shoulders, jaw, hips.

Where you hold stress isn't random.

It's years of unfelt emotion stored in tissue.

The body tightens around
what you won't feel.

Tight hips, locked jaw, frozen shoulders, your private filing cabinet.

It's why a deep stretch can make someone cry.

A hip opener can release grief held for decades.

The body doesn't forget.
It archives.

This is why understanding alone hits a ceiling.

You see the pattern, but it still lives in your nervous system.

So notice where your tension lives, and when it started.

What weren't you allowed to feel back then?

The body keeps the score.
It also keeps the way out.
