

You didn't get over it.

You built a freezer around it and called that healing.

As kids, when something was too big to deal with, we froze it.

Growing older doesn't automatically thaw it.

The body keeps it frozen, year
after year.

And the freezing costs you: a quiet, constant drain of energy that shows up as being stuck in one life area or another.

We think healing means finally getting over it.

But it runs the other way.

Healing is going back in,
feeling the thing fully, with the awareness you didn't have back then.

You sit with it, you stop
fighting it, and the body starts opening up.

The ice melts and the energy returns.

You stop living from a place
you locked away decades ago.
