

Your nervous system started shaping itself before you were born.

Before words, before concepts, the body is already listening.

In the womb, you feel the whole field around you.

Your mother's fear.
The unspoken tension
between your parents.

@thesunchi

You had no idea what any of it meant.

But the nervous system doesn't need meaning to record, it just receives.

What she couldn't move through became a contraction
in her.

And that shaped a contraction in you.

This isn't blame.

She was carrying her own
inherited field, handed down
the same way.

But it means some of what you call "my anxiety" was in the room before you arrived.
