

Shame, fear, guilt are a contraction of consciousness.

Underneath everything you feel, there's one movement:
expansion, or contraction.

When life feels safe, the system opens.

When it feels like too much, it pulls in.

Shame, fear, guilt, anxiety.
Those are contracted states
of consciousness.

And consciousness doesn't contract alone.

The nervous system
contracts with it.

So a low state isn't only in your head.

It's a shape your whole system took once and never fully released.

Expansion isn't something you force.

It's what's happening when the contraction lets go.
